

Statement by the undersigned delegates of the 14th Biennial Conference of the International Society for Theoretical Psychology:

The 14th Biennial Conference of the International Society for Theoretical Psychology took place during a tense and difficult time for the host city, Thessaloniki and for Greece. Through strikes and demonstrations the people of Greece protested the austerity measures being imposed on them by the Greek government under pressure from the EU and global financial institutions. We are members of an international society dedicated to scientific dialogue and the critical engagement with knowledge. Many of us are deeply concerned about the suppression of protest in Greece, and the imposition of economic despair on the population and it is clear to us that this crisis is not solely a Greek situation, but a moment of global pressure which compromises countries' and peoples' rights and future. We are attentive to what the people in Greece are saying and doing about their lives, and we express our solidarity with them in these difficult times. We are also concerned about the impact on democracy in Greece and the EU and on the institutions of education and welfare.
